What Say You, Elder? The Life and Lore of Rev. Daniel Field
A Vermont Methodist Minister of the 19th Century
Presented by Adam Boyce - Vermont Fiddler,
Yankee Fiddler, Author and Living History Portrayer
Wednesday, February 6, 1:00 pm

Rev. Daniel “Elder” Field (1805-1883) was born in Springfield, Vermont. He was “called” to become an itinerant Methodist minister, serving various communities throughout Vermont, New Hampshire, and New York State.

Rev. Field retired from the full-time ministry in 1863 to a small farm in Williamstown, Vermont where he spent the remainder of his life, occasionally filling in at local churches as a “supply” minister. It was during this time that many stories about “Elder” Field, as he was known, began to accumulate, showing his droll, wise, and sometimes eccentric ways.

Adam Boyce, whose great-grandparents purchased the former “Elder” Field farm in 1896 which remains in the Boyce family today, relates stories handed down from his family and other sources about the pithy parson.

Adam Boyce has been a life-long student of history. Besides taking an interest in “Elder” Field, he was actively involved for many years with the Williamstown Historical Society in his former hometown of Williamstown, Vermont, along with holding various elected positions in local town government, including town moderator. He learned to play the fiddle from longtime Chelsea fiddler, Harold Luce (1918-2014), and has been involved in nearly every aspect of traditional music and dance history for over 20 years, including the composition of over 100 tunes.

Adam became a speaker and living history presenter through the Humanities Council in Vermont and New Hampshire, starting in 2001. In addition to his love of history, he is an avid collector of antique clocks, and succumbs to the annual Spring rite of passage in Vermont, known as maple sugaring time. Adam and his wife, Mary-Anne, live in West Windsor, Vermont.

Dental Health Care for Older Adults
Presented by Kristin Schiessl-Alf, RDH and Jayne Hull, Patient Coordinator
Thursday, March 21, 1:00 pm

By the year 2030, twenty percent of the U.S. population will be age 65 or older. In Vermont, this percentage is expected to be even greater, at twenty-nine percent. Historically, as people have aged, their oral health has declined. However, a combination of advances in dental technology, public health initiatives, and continued education from dental professionals has allowed people of all ages to improve and maintain their oral health.

Kristin Schiessl-Alf, Registered Dental Hygienist with thirty-three years of experience, and Jayne Hull, Patient Coordinator, with over twenty years of experience, have worked together for many years at Dr. Mark Knott’s and Dr. J. David Laughlin’s offices. Kristin and Jayne will offer a brief, interactive presentation on Dental Health Care for older adults at the Thompson Center. Topics will include: prescription medications and dry mouth, the relationship between oral bacteria and chronic systemic diseases, periodontal disease, jaw joint and jaw muscle issues, and prevention of tooth decay.
